

Fictional Writing: Character Development

Characters make a story interesting. A good writer describes characters in a way that readers can picture how the character looks and behaves. Often, the readers can relate the character to themselves, or to someone they know.

Think about the characters that you are creating. Write answers to the following questions.

Name of Character: _____

What does this character look like? For example: Is your character tall, short, a red-head, skinny, etc.

Describe this character's personality. For example: Is your character nice, mean, shy, a bully, mysterious, etc.

Name of Character: _____

What does this character look like?

Describe this character's personality.

Name of Character: _____

What does this character look like?

Describe this character's personality.

Use this page as a guide when you write your story. Try to write in a way that the reader can picture what your character looks like, and how they act.