There is a growing anxiety among Chinese college students that, upon graduation, they might be unable to find high-paying jobs and feel disappointed unable to escape the ranks of the "lie flat tribe," a term used to describe young people in China. They are nicknamed because they are individuals who live with no ambition or motivation. "If you choose to stay in Beijing after graduation, and say, you earn 10,000-20,000 yuan every month and buy a house outside the ninth ring road by getting mortgages, you may end up paying off your loans for your 70s, enduring long procedures to suffer having a mortgage," said Wang Jiaxiong, Beijing Jiaotong University student, [illegible] that he may not be able to afford a house after graduation and, however, he chose a career in the "tribe" [illegible] because of studying housing prices.
