

Martin Luther King Jr. "I Have A Dream"

I am happy to join with you today in what will go down in history as the greatest demonstration for freedom in the history of our nation.

More than a year ago, a great American, whose symbolic shadow we stand today, signed the Emancipation Proclamation. That momentous decision came as a great beacon of hope to millions of Negro slaves who had been buried in the depths of an abiding injustice. It came as a great spiritual light to millions of Negro men who had been buried in the depths of an abiding injustice. It came as a great spiritual light to millions of Negro men who had been buried in the depths of an abiding injustice.

But one hundred years later, the Negro still is not free. One hundred years later, the life of the Negro is still sadly crippled by the manacles of segregation and the chains of discrimination. One hundred years later, the Negro lives on a lonely island of poverty in the midst of a vast ocean of material prosperity. One hundred years later, the Negro is still languished in the corners of American society and finds himself an exile in his own land. And so we've come here today to dramatize a shameful condition.

In a sense we've come to our nation's capital to dramatize a cause. When the architects of our Republic wrote the magnificent words of the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence, they were signing a promissory note to which every American was to fall heir. This note was a promise that all men, yes, black men as well as white men, would be guaranteed the "unalienable Rights" of "Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness." It is obvious today that America has defaulted on this promissory note, and we must remind her that she has given the Negro people a bad check, a check which has come back marked "Insufficient Funds."

But we refuse to believe that the bank of justice is bankrupt. We refuse to believe that there are insufficient funds in the great vaults of opportunity of this nation. And so we've come to cash this check, a check that will give us upon demand the riches of freedom and the security of justice.

We have also come to this hallowed spot to remind America of the fierce urgency of now. This is the time to engage in the任务 of cleaning up the house.
