

SECRET

William Flinn, 68, Green-Citrusford, London, was the first to describe the patient whose cyber habits shattered his death threats.

■ Several months earlier, a postcard from a stranger to an individual when I was 13. I thought it was a prank or a joke, but when I got another postcard from the sender, I was shocked. From then on, I started to receive postcards from the sender.

By the time I turned 15, they were sending me a letter every day. It was a personal letter, but it was to scare me. One day I thought I was going to be killed. There were various messages from the sender, including one that said "I'm going to kill you." I was scared, but I didn't know what to do. I was scared, but I didn't know what to do.

There were various messages from the sender, including one that said "I'm going to kill you." I was scared, but I didn't know what to do. I was scared, but I didn't know what to do. I was scared, but I didn't know what to do. I was scared, but I didn't know what to do.

I was scared, but I didn't know what to do. I was scared, but I didn't know what to do. I was scared, but I didn't know what to do. I was scared, but I didn't know what to do. I was scared, but I didn't know what to do. I was scared, but I didn't know what to do.

There were various messages from the sender, including one that said "I'm going to kill you." I was scared, but I didn't know what to do. I was scared, but I didn't know what to do.

The sender should also understand that the sender's help should be obtained. ■