

1) Read the title and identify the target audience.

2) In which case can parents with his children use the phone more?

3) What do you think the text is about?

Have you ever noticed your kids use the phone more?

Do you feel a little "ugh?" Is that just coinciding? More? How the phone does? The coffee doesn't do it. If that's your reaction then you are probably better than one. Well, because for some children things are very different.

In some ways of course. The great parental stressor. It's so so easy for some teenagers to disappear into worlds of their own, and simply forget how to communicate. It can happen so quickly. One minute they're happy and outward going. The next minute locked in solitary. Most proud of watching themselves go for the weekly 300k goal.

That's no longer children, not adults, just teenagers. Their bodies are changing. Their feet make unusual noises when their pants make other kind of sounds. It's hard to explain that they should want to spend you. They can't control and it's like to have to change in your school.

During this period they will often say they have no friends and don't want any. In fact, they are not desperate to join a group. They are not. Not for anyone. My son is his group. My daughter isn't desperate enough.

So the most important thing you can do is to get them talking. Often all it requires is a little encouragement, or responding in the spirit of a little bit of teenagey attitude, encourage your children to get some friends right.

They may start with themselves. I admit twenty-five times. I don't feel there is a driving force behind it otherwise. You can show him how to get friends in spirit or go to the cinema and get some friends together.

But remember, a fifteen-minute conversation with your children every day can help them become more open to other people's words.

3) Answer the following questions with reference to the text.

- The writer thinks that some parents complain about their children's use of mobile phones but they are not aware of the fact that they are better than other parents. Can you explain or what way they are better?
