SECTION A

About 4000 families are reading their children at home, and they are doing very well. One example is the "Dinner Family" from Washington. Mrs. Mason, 37, and her 27-year-old husband, James, do not read with their children. The "Dinner Family" encourages children and encourages Mrs. Mason, who reads at home with her husband. They have a large, comfortable study in their house. All materials are laid out on the table. Children's questions go on the wall. James says, "Daddy says and I think we get nothing from school—we'd be glad to explain. We know how to do it, really, everything was fine."

Some parents who are reading their children at home have made arrangements for the children to read. Mrs. Mason, "The Dinner Family" — encouraged both of them, and, of course, we read along with her. She has a beautiful reading and mathematics, too. They were shopping late in the year. Then they go shopping with me every day for the things we need."

Mr. and Mrs. Mason take their children to the library, to museums, to concerts, to swimming pools and picnics. They have their children in very good schools. Mrs. Mason says, "All of them are very interested. Some of them are studying and reading the 'National Book'."
