

Speaker: We are introducing this program to bring you a special announcement. The French-Indian War is over! Both sides have signed the Treaty of Paris to end the war. We have a special report on the news right now.

Indian 1: _____

Speaker: Thank you, _____. Oh look, here come some Native Americans now! Excuse me, could I get your reactions on the Treaty of Paris?

Indian 1: We don't have any time to talk to you.

Indian 2: Yeah, we have to pack up our belongings and move.

Speaker: Where are you going?

Indian 2: Haven't you heard? We are being forced to move west.

McDowell: That isn't fair! We were here first!

Speaker: Okay, that was unfair. Maybe we can get a more positive reaction from the French. How do you like the _____? Excuse me, could I get your reactions on the Treaty of Paris?

French 1: We don't have time for this chat.

Speaker: Why not? It will only take a minute.

French 2: Haven't you heard? We are all being forced to leave North America!

French 3: Yeah, we have to head back to France. No more trading with the Indians.

Speaker: That doesn't seem fair. Who are the Indians who were trading with the Indians first, and they wanted to like you better.

McDowell: Tell me about it!

Speaker: Oh my! This is not going how I planned. Here come the British now. I'm afraid to ask them what they think, but here it goes. Excuse me, I suppose you're not happy with the Treaty of Paris either.

British 1: We're not happy, we're elated!

British 2: Yeah, we now have total control of all the land that the French used to own.

British 3: Don't forget, we don't have to worry about the Indians either.

British 4: That's right! We made them move west.

McDowell: Money!

Speaker: Well, at least one group is happy... for now.
