

There are things we want to have and things we need to have. Sometimes when we have some money to spend, we want to spend it on wants, and not needs.

Directions: Read or listen to Alexander Who Used to be Rich Last Sunday. Think about the decisions Alexander makes when it comes to spending his money. Are they wants, or needs? Draw and label pictures that show what Alexander spent his money on. What would you say to Alexander about Wants and Needs?

The form consists of a large rectangular area with rounded corners. On the right side of this area is a black and white illustration of a young boy with curly hair, wearing a t-shirt and pants, standing with his hands in his pockets. On the left side of the same area are five horizontal lines for writing, stacked vertically.
