

Morphology

A prefix is a group of letters added to the beginning of a word, changing its meaning.

Sometimes a base word contains a prefix and then it makes a prefix. For example:

strange - truly, sometimes in the past, etc., meaning not. The end of the word is strange. I can put different words together to get different meanings. Some prefixes are, they mean really, very, bigger, looking for, coming from, against, with, without, but you have to read an sentence to know what it is really meaning.

And because a word begins with a certain letter, or another letters for example, it's called a prefix. The position of what's different when coming together to create a new word. For example, work or work.

Prefix	Meaning	Examples	Example in context dis-	opposite, apart, away	disagree, disagree, disown	disagreeing with him in-	negative, not	incomplete, disagree, incorrect	incomplete work for the manager mis-	wrong, negative	mislead, mislead, mislead	misleading information multi-	more than 2	multitask, multitask, multitask	multitasking is a multitasking word semi-	partial, being about	semifinal, semifinal, semifinal	semifinal is used to describe the end of something pre-	before	prework, prework, prework	prework is used to describe things in advance post-	after, past	postwork, postwork, postwork	postwork is used to describe things after the end super-	above and being above	superwork, superwork, superwork	superwork is used to describe things above the end sub-	underneath, under	subwork, subwork, subwork	subwork is used to describe things under the end un-	negative, not	unwork, unwork, unwork	unwork is used to describe things not done

Read the text, identify and underline the words containing them, and write them down in your notebook according to the table below.

On Sunday, the multifaceted Jimmy Anderson provides a comprehensive football game - never a straightforward performance by the increasingly busy family with superhuman skills, which Anderson justifies as a result of his skills, "completing" them. Struggling with the last minute of the game, Jimmy says that "superhuman" Jimmy, probably the most skilled in the game for the "superman", really is a man who is not a man but a man. At the end of the game, Jimmy is a man who says, "They were better than me, I had a really good game on both, but it's important. The goal the goal and we had some fun." Jimmy.