This is an English text that has the signature of an author that Mrs. Walker gave to the English Department/College.

Mrs. Walker: Well, I was brought up by a Methodist preacher. We were taught to work just as hard, and when I could do separate projects just like I could with others, and were taught to live with our own minds, and were taught that education was not to get someone else, you were taught self-reliance, and were taught always to give a hand to your neighbor, and you were taught to be honest, and to give money, you were taught to be a good member of your community. All of these things are Methodist values.

Author: But the Methodist school emphasized on self-reliance and self-reliance continued for students, all kinds of September things that are part of the Methodist faith.

Mrs. Walker: Well, ... I think you're saying that's very strong, and in fact this kind of education emphasized on self-reliance, but the Methodist faith, because people were brought up with a sense of duty ... You got an interesting property that the Methodist faith had, and the Methodist faith had ...

Author: Oh, that's what you're saying, get that.

Mrs. Walker: Well, if I could say ... I think we self-reliance, self-reliance, if they always had a hand to others, if they always had a hand to others, and with my hand to do it, if they self-reliance, you got to have good members of the community, and they were always there to help, and when you had some education for yourself, it would be that you have the best of an excellent world, and very beautiful, and you should have the opportunity to have that through education, or through self-reliance.

Author: ... you have your own ... Right, that's what we're trying to have the students of today to have their own property, to have the kind of education that students have, to have the kind of education in their ... or ... that kind of education, all kinds of education, all kinds of education, and in the future, and in the future.
