Stock Market Crash of 1929

Times were good in the 1920s and the stock prices soared to peaks never seen before. But in 1929, the bubble burst and stocks declined rapidly. On October 24th, 1929 (Black Thursday), investors began panic selling and more than 13 million shares were sold. The market continued to slide and on Tuesday, October 29th (Black Tuesday), about 16 million shares were dumped and billions of dollars were lost. This resulted in the Great Depression which lasted until about 1939.
