Darla:

O.K., Gary, how did you get a job?

Gary:

Well, at first, I was looking for a job as a short order cook. You know the training I took last year.

Rory:

So you got a short order cook job?

Gary:

No, I got smart. I was reading the want ads, sending resumes, and going to the state employment office.

Darla:

Sounds pretty good. So why didn't you get a job?

Gary:

Because there are only a few short order cooks in this area and there are very few, if any, openings each year.

Rory:

Sounds pretty smart to me. Looking for a job for which there are no openings.

Darla:

That is not too bright. But, you did get a job.

Gary:

Right. When I was not getting anywhere I asked my worker at the state employment office for help.
