- Lesson focus: To understand the rural background of the novel, its significance and Hardy's interest in this theme.
- Opening exercise: Briefly brainstorm the differences between living in a town or city, compared to living in the countryside, in the early 21st Century
 - A few recent newspaper cuttings on urban and rural issues could be examined
 - Think about changes which are taking place and resistance to
- Discussion ideas: The critic Arnold Kettle described the thesis of the novel as: 'The destruction of the English peasantry, allied to the fate of a pure woman'

Social / political background > Agricultural and social conditions. Hardy's presentation of this theme is

- largely symbolic.

 Students, in teams, should find examples from throughout the novel under the following headings
 - Each team of students could examine one of the 'Phases'
 - The examples provided can either be given to help students get started or held back in case help is needed. About the text > Hardy's Wessex
 - Events These provide images of the theme (for example the death of Prince)
 - Description This creates prevailing moods (for example in the ways Talbothays and Flintcomb Ash are described)
 - Coincidences The dice seems to be loaded against Tess in particular (for example the letter under the rug). This heading links with the second half of Arnold Kettle's quotation

- Students need to explain the significance of their examples and how they relate to the theme.
- Textual examination: The interest that Hardy has in this theme, and his symbolic (rather than entirely naturalistic) approach, has been said by some critics to lead to weaknesses in his style
 - Consider the following suggested weaknesses:

 • 'Preaching' directly by the
 - narrator
 - 'Preaching' through the characters
 - Consequent unconvincing dialogue
 - Lack of psychological realism
 - Tendency for characters to be
 - caricatures Students could argue for or against the notion that Hardy is a weak stylist, finding examples to support their view.

Imagery and symbolism in Tess of the d'Urbervilles > Landscapes of desire vs. landscapes of community

- Recreative task: Script or improvise a conversation between Tess's parents
 - This should be set at a point early in the novel, perhaps the day when Mr Durbeyfield receives the 'news' about
 - his family connections It should include discussion of the rural lifestyle of the family.
- Critical task: In his Preface, Hardy says, A novel is an impression, not an argument.
 - How far do you think this is true of Tess of the D'Urbervilles? Themes in Tess of the d'Urbervilles > Nature as sympathetic or indifferent > Hardy's use of Nature
- Extension task: Find some description of an urban scene in one of Dickens' novels (in Hard Times, for example, or Pip's arrival in London in Great Expectations) and compare it with a passage of rural description in Tess of the d'Urbervilles.
