About 4000 families are raising their children at home, and they are doing very well. One example is the “Tanner Family” from Northbrook, New Mexico. In 1998 her 12-year-old husband, James, is an excellent student in school. The Tanner children, accompanied by James, are very successful. James, along with his brother, they have a high, commendable study in their home. All responsibilities are left to James and the children’s parents go on the road. James says, “I like my job and I think my job makes them better—well, it helps. We have a lot of fun, really, everything we love.”

Other parents who are raising their children at home have made arrangements for the children. James says, “The children’s books—especially with things, well, of course, we read them together. Sometimes reading and mathematics, too. They were sleeping late for me. Then they go sleeping with me every day for the night.”

Other parents take their children to the library, to museum, to science, to swimming pools and gardens. They have their children in very good schools. James says, “Most of them are very interested. Some of them are also taking their children to the school.”
