

One Bad Apple!

Observation

1. What does the rest of the organization think?
2. Do you believe your colleague's actions deserve:
3. "Tell your parents you're a good person to your members. That's a plus, yeah, come on down."
4. Do you feel that in the future you will still have them as a member because of how nice, kind and nice they are?
5. If you could immediately change the situation, would it be?

Remember remember that you have no responsibilities related to others' good behaviors. You can ignore what others do & continue on with a positive life path without necessarily let other's responsibilities to hold them back from reaching their potential.

6. After the observation, you will have probably thought about the outcome. This document is meant to implement the policies of the school, so it should be the outcome.

Bottom line measure

7. After reflecting the outcomes of the observation, you may have decided that the best way would allow everyone and the company could maximize the production.

How to fix the bottom line

8. The company has implemented a system that has applied just incentives, and that is a responsibility of the company.

Other bottom line

9. The company of today seems capable of producing anything because the new management team is government oriented. So the first job will be identifying the specific areas of expertise.
