

Topic: Does obsession make love stronger?

Is it love or obsession?

Many people think that love makes people blind. Although it is just a belief, many people think it's true. On the one hand, some people think that love really makes people blind and they can do anything for the person they love. On the other hand, some people believe that people shouldn't do whatever comes to their mind. In my opinion, people can still do everything in the name of love.

Firstly, there are many stories that talk about love and obsession and these obsession is ridiculous. For example, an Arabian tale where the girl made the boy's wooden boat, and the boy got out there the boat and without father's knowing, I think, the boy or his stevedore took the girl and her dove obsession the girl made. It seems to me that the boy only looks about himself when he took the girl's boat out. He did it for nothing just to marry the girl. Another example is the story "Great Expectations" by Charles Dickens.

Secondly, obsession is something which gives people pain. Obsession makes people very thin, night walking and leads them making wrong decisions. Let me give you a real life example. On the 10th of March, 1994 a newspaper from Thailand reported that an old man (Chit Phrasak) killed his daughter. He thought the government had to attract the attention of other people - a crime that Thailand wasn't proud of, by making his only child die as a result of it. As I see it, he was not the just because he had been used so often. I think the obsession with his daughter was the main reason why he killed her.

In conclusion, love and obsession are two different things. It is my view that obsession gives people pain and makes them do bad things. I believe that obsession is something that leads to pain.