

Post-Test
WRITTEN

Identify the type of irony in each sentence. Dramatic, verbal, and situational.

1. "How typical of you to pretend that you're not interested in participating in the game!" said the coach. "You might as well just stay home and watch the TV. You'll be able to see the game from the comfort of your own home."

2. "How typical of you to pretend that you're a good person when in fact you're a terrible person!" said the judge. "You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person. You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person. You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person. You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person."

3. "How typical of you to pretend that you're a good person when in fact you're a terrible person!" said the judge. "You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person. You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person. You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person. You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person. You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person."

4. "How typical of you to pretend that you're a good person when in fact you're a terrible person!" said the judge. "You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person. You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person. You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person. You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person. You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person."

5. "How typical of you to pretend that you're a good person when in fact you're a terrible person!" said the judge. "You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person. You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person. You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person. You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person. You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person."

6. "How typical of you to pretend that you're a good person when in fact you're a terrible person!" said the judge. "You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person. You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person. You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person. You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person. You're a terrible person and you're a terrible person."
