

Cirrocumulus Clouds

are sometimes called a 'mackerel' or 'herringbone' sky because they made up of rows of small white cloudlets. Cirrocumulus clouds are short-lived and appear at high altitudes above 18,000 feet.

