

Answer: The answer is that the man is a doctor, but a girl is his daughter. When I ask the doctor, "How old is your daughter?" the doctor answers "I don't know."

That's a classic logic puzzle. The answer is that the man is a doctor, but a girl is his daughter. When I ask the doctor, "How old is your daughter?" the doctor answers "I don't know."

Q: What year was the first computer invented? Answer: There's no year and there's no first. The first computer was invented in 1946.

Q: What year was the first computer invented? Answer: There's no year and there's no first. The first computer was invented in 1946.

Q: What year was the first computer invented? Answer: There's no year and there's no first. The first computer was invented in 1946.

Q: What year was the first computer invented? Answer: There's no year and there's no first. The first computer was invented in 1946.

Q: What year was the first computer invented? Answer: There's no year and there's no first. The first computer was invented in 1946.

Q: What year was the first computer invented? Answer: There's no year and there's no first. The first computer was invented in 1946.

Q: What year was the first computer invented? Answer: There's no year and there's no first. The first computer was invented in 1946.

Q: What year was the first computer invented? Answer: There's no year and there's no first. The first computer was invented in 1946.

Q: What year was the first computer invented? Answer: There's no year and there's no first. The first computer was invented in 1946.

Q: What year was the first computer invented? Answer: There's no year and there's no first. The first computer was invented in 1946.

Q: What year was the first computer invented? Answer: There's no year and there's no first. The first computer was invented in 1946.