

Exam

Day 1000: Subject and Predicate Naming Book

Read the following carefully before you begin.

The subject of a sentence is what it's about (the person or thing).

The predicate tells something about the subject.

In this sentence,

The child of candy walked in the hot sun.

The subject is the child of candy.

The predicate is walked in the hot sun.

The single subject of a sentence is the main word in the subject. It is either a noun or a pronoun.

For example, in the subject the child of candy, the most important word is child.

The single predicate of a sentence is the main word in the predicate. It is a verb.

For example, in the predicate walked in the hot sun, the most important word is walked.

Now you try. Read all of the directions carefully. We will go over this on a class after announcements.

- Read the sentences below.
- Underline the complete subject once.
- Underline the complete predicate twice.
- Circle the single subject in two-colored pencil on white.
- Circle the single predicate in blue-colored pencil on orange.
