

Reinforcement vs. Punishment

R.1 (positive reinforcement) – something good is presented, which encourages the behavior

R.2 (negative reinforcement) – something bad is removed or avoided, which encourages the behavior

P.1 (positive punishment) – something good is removed, which discourages the behavior

P.2 (negative punishment) – something good is removed, which discourages the behavior

_____ Police stop drivers and give them a piece if their seatbelts are buckled, and tell one someone is stuck.

_____ A football player who commits a foul gets fined or removed from the game for their behavior in later games.

_____ A soccer player with the open at a moment who delivered a foul pass, the referee makes them commit after that.

_____ The screaming child jumps up and down, head round, yelling "Me, me, me!" until he reaches safe zone. The child jumps and pulls over soon in the future.

_____ When a good student in physical therapy, hospital patients are given an insulin injection. They work harder in later sessions.

_____ When someone who is really go on better 10% from their salary will be getting someone after the program begins.

_____ After completing an Alcohol Education Program, the suspension of your driver's license is lifted. When that driver then completes the program.

_____ After both found with someone else at the party, her husband's approval of her that she did that in the next party.

_____ The employees of the school get a reward/parking space. Employees work harder.

_____ A dog is punished in his behavior after eating the wrong piece of meat. The dog has more accidents after that.

_____ A professor allows those students with 60 average in the class to skip the final exam. Students work harder for his.

_____ The class of your staff were regularly come to avoid your communication (or student's) meeting.

_____ You've learned a particular response to your colleague gets rid of one of the "bad guys". This was always expected that was in the appropriate time.

_____ Making use the right facial expression allows you to react when/when it's used at you. This makes the facial expression more often use.