

Forgiveness is ...

Forgiveness is ...

People, upon rationally determining that they have been unfairly treated, forgive when they willfully abandon resentment and related responses (in which they have a right), and endeavour to respond to the wrongdoer based on the moral principle of beneficence, which may include compassion, unconditional worth, generosity, and moral love (in which the wrongdoer, by nature of the harmful act or acts, has no right) (Gilligan & Fingelkorn, 2000).

Forgiveness is not ...

- Pardon, legal remedy or leniency
- Condoning or excusing
- Reconciliation (you can come together again, but still not forgive)
- Justification (you can forgive, but don't have to believe their action was bad)
- Forgiving (forgiving would leave you vulnerable to the offence again)
- Balancing scales (getting back at someone is not the same as forgiving)
- Letting time heal the wound (forgiving is active, rather than passive)
- Abandoning resentment (you might let go of resentment, but still not forgive)
- Possessing positive feelings (see right, feel positive towards an individual, but still not forgive them)
- Saying "I forgive you" (you can forgive without using specific words)
- Making a decision to forgive (it can involve a decision, but forgiveness is a process which takes time)
- A quick fix (forgiveness takes time, and progress may fluctuate)
- Accepting what happened (you could accept the facts of an event but not forgive; accepting may be a part of forgiveness but not all acceptance is forgiveness)
- Moving on (you may decide to move on without looking back, and without forgiving)
- Accepting what happened knowing that God will punish them (this approach focuses more on justice than forgiveness)
- Saying "I have the satisfaction of not letting the person get to me"
- Letting the other person know how much they owe me" (this is a form of revenge, and is using the mindset of having someone as a weapon)
