

WY 100000

100000

Objectives: Analyze specific Paper Use and Function 1: Persuasive Writing

Audience: 11th grade honors students/other groups as well

Activity: Several class periods, perhaps over several weeks

Periods: 100

Periods: 11 Honors students and others

Periods: 12 Honors students/other high school and occupational writing

Activities:

1. Introduction and Definitions

2. Examples and Counterexamples

3. Copies of high school and college students' persuasive writing of the text. Exclude most persuasive and the others. Students should be assigned to the author of the text. List of the text's author and the author's intent.

Notes:

1. Give students notes on proper usage of persuasive writing.

2. Complete several examples together and then have students work independently on writing their own. These are the students' students' own work and should be used as a model.

Concepts: Persuasive writing and persuasive writing.

3. After students read high school and college students' persuasive writing, give them a list of persuasive writing and ask them to identify the persuasive writing.

4. In groups or for homework, have students read high school and college students' persuasive writing. Students should identify persuasive writing and use of persuasive devices. Students should be prepared to discuss the persuasive writing.

Notes: This is a good tool for teaching or reviewing persuasive writing. It is a good tool for teaching or reviewing persuasive writing. It is a good tool for teaching or reviewing persuasive writing.

5. Ask students to write their own persuasive writing of their own. This piece may include persuasive, notes, and persuasive writing.

Structure of writing: Persuasive writing is a persuasive writing. It is a persuasive writing. It is a persuasive writing.