

Handwriting identification

Below are some common forms of cursive handwriting taught in American schools. Portland School District, for example, teaches the D'Nealian form; Beaverton teaches the Zaner-Bloser style. By the time students reach college, the vast majority of them print rather than use any form of cursive.

The quick brown fox jumps over the D'Nealian A registered trademark of Scott Foresman - Addison Wesley Publishing Company.

The quick brown fox jumps

Zaner-Bloser Copyright Zaner-Bloser, Inc.

The quick brown fox jump

Handwriting without Tears A registered trademarked of Jan Z. Olsen.

The quick brown fox jumps

Palmer Copyrighted by Macmillan Company. Palmer Method is ® by the A N Palmer Company.

The quick brown fox jumps ove

Getty Dubay Italic Developed by Barbara M. Getty and Inga S. Dubay of Portland

Source: Educational Fontware, Inc.

DAVID BADDERS/THE OREGONIAN