

The chocolate factory

Miss Weston is showing the children round the sweet shop to chocolate factory.

"What is the most important room in the sweet factory?" he said. "They must surely use machines for making and wrapping sweets!"
 "Yes, indeed," said the children. "The sweet factory machines for food leads to the chocolate shop, and the chocolate shop leads to the sweet factory and the shop to the chocolate shop and the shop to the sweet factory!"
 "Yes, yes," Mr Weston said. "They must use machines for making and wrapping sweets!"

"Yes, yes," the children said. "We want to make a shop!"

"Yes, yes," Mr Weston said. "They must use machines for making and wrapping sweets!"
 "Yes, yes," Mr Weston said. "They must use machines for making and wrapping sweets!"

"Yes, yes," the children said. "We want to make a shop!"

Mr Weston suddenly suddenly became very excited. "They must use machines for making and wrapping sweets!"
 "Yes, yes," Mr Weston said. "They must use machines for making and wrapping sweets!"
 "Yes, yes," Mr Weston said. "They must use machines for making and wrapping sweets!"

"They must use machines for making and wrapping sweets!"
 "Yes, yes," Mr Weston said. "They must use machines for making and wrapping sweets!"

(The boy and the children in the factory should look.)

1. Who are the children, Fred and George?
2. Why was Mr Weston so excited in this shop?
3. How many people were visiting the sweet factory?
4. How was the children travelling round the factory?
5. Why is this the most important room in the factory?
6. Write the five things Mr Weston told the children not to do.
7. How can you tell that this is Mr Weston's favourite room?
8. Why was Weston so happy of starting an evening job-stopper?
9. What happened to these job-stoppers as you packed them?
10. At which times was Mr Weston (a) proud (b) happy (c) alone?
 - (i) He was proud of...
 - (ii) He was happy because...
 - (iii) He was alone with...
11. What did the job-stoppers look like?

