Read the following and then answer the questions that follow.

Miss Lee has been struggling with eating disorders all her middle school years and a part of her high school years. In middle school, she was at Spencerville High School. Her classmates there were aware of her disorder, and it greatly affected the way they treated her. At the start of her junior year, she transferred to Madison High School. She decided not to tell anyone about her disorder since she was really concerned by that time. Even though the friends at Spencerville and Madison all showed concern about her well-being, their approaches differed greatly, especially in kindness, communication, and individual opinions about her personality and character. For example, at Spencerville, girls always followed her to the bathroom to check if she threw up or tried to do so. Madison girls did not force her to eat, or give her advice and become better. The way people dealt with her was what changed her life.
