

Sam G. Mattoxiger invented the shoe-lasting machine. This machine could sew the upper part of a shoe to the sole, thereby producing thousands of pairs of shoes in one day. By hand, skilled workers were able to make only forty to fifty pairs of shoes per day. Mattoxiger's invention caused the shoe industry to increase production from one million to eleven million pairs a year.

Sam G. Mattoxiger