

From Wikipedia: Manufacturing dictionary entries

The blast is a hot air injection design and developed by Apple. It is particularly marketed as a platform for users' personal media such as books, documents, photos, music, and games, as well as other content. It costs about 1,000 euros (200 euros), its size and weight are between those of most contemporary smartphones and other smartphones, and it is said to be a hybrid of the two.

The Apple iPad (2nd generation) is a second generation of the new iPad, successor of the original iPad. It has a larger screen and a faster processor. The iPad 2 is the second generation of the original iPad. It has a larger screen and a faster processor. The iPad 2 is the second generation of the original iPad. It has a larger screen and a faster processor.

Apple is a public company listed on the New York Stock Exchange. It is the largest company in the world. It is the largest company in the world. It is the largest company in the world. It is the largest company in the world.

Apple is a public company listed on the New York Stock Exchange. It is the largest company in the world. It is the largest company in the world. It is the largest company in the world. It is the largest company in the world.

- 1. Illustration of a man holding a rifle (you don't need to identify the man)
- 2. Illustration of a hand using a tool to work on a metal surface

- 3. Illustration of a mechanical assembly (what are the parts called?)
- 4. Illustration of a three-legged stool (what is the stool called?)

- 5. Illustration of a hand using a tool to work on a metal surface (what is the tool called?)
- 6. Illustration of a three-legged stool (what is the stool called?)
- 7. Illustration of a hand using a tool to work on a metal surface (what is the tool called?)