Near the end of 1832, Beaumont left the army to experiment on Alexis more. Beaumont tryd a variety of different foods again, this time including sausage, raw oysters, and mutton. He saw that exercise helped the digestion. In April 1833, Beaumont published his work and findings in a book called: Experiments and Observations on the Gastric Juice and the Physiology of Digestion. A month or so later Alexis left for Canada, and Beaumont went on to do private medical practice.

Scotty's Castle is a mansion at the edge of Death Valley National Park, California, designed by Martin de Duboway and built by Mat Roy Thompson. It gets its name from Walter E. Scott, a con man and prospector. However, Scott never owned the mansion, as it belonged to his friend Albert Johnson. The construction had been stopped because it was unaware to Johnson that the land they were bidding on was government property. When that matter was resolved, they continued construction for a short time until in October, 1923. That's when the stock market crashed, sending the construction of the castle to a crashin halt.
