

Music Technology Resources

Compiled by Scott Faust for the PMEA District 8 Chorus Festival

Games/Interactives

<http://www.musictechteacher.com/musicquizzes.htm>

This website offers music quizzes, games & worksheets by Ms. Garrett. Ms. K.Garrett who has been a teacher for 12 years. She is employed at Birmingham, Al at the Central Park School. Her students have been taught & aided by her website in her music technology lab since 1997.

www.nyphilkids.org This is the best website for young students for them to learn more about the orchestra. There are links and all sorts of multimedia including games, create your own instruments, biographical information, and lots of excerpts.

<http://www.electricbluesclub.co.uk/ebcdownloads.html>

This site contains a list of links to good educational games and downloads. It gives descriptions of the programs, lets you know if they are free or paid, and links you to the download.

<http://www.happynote.com/music/learn.html>

This is a good website for students because there are many different ways to learn about music theory. It also uses animals so that it can get the students attention while trying to learn. It also teaches them music theory in non-conventional ways. As a student some kids learn easier by the hands on approach. There are multiple games on this site that you can download.

http://musicmoz.org/Computers/Software/Educational/Theory_and_Ear_Training/

This has a list of programs or software you can download and/or buy. IT has links to other websites where you can download/buy programs or software also. There is an explanation of each of the links and what they contain. You can use it for your own knowledge or have the students check it out to suggest programs/software to buy for the school.

www.dsokids.com/

Dallas Symphony Orchestra interactive website geared toward kids and teachers. Printable orchestral seating charts (audience too!), composer information, and even a meet the performers section. Every orchestra needs a website like this! Many computer-based activities as well as games.