

temperature of the liquids added might not have been neutral, causing the mixtures to feel cold, or warm even when an exo or endo thermic reaction didn't occur. Similar labs could be to use other solids, like yeast, or to use different containers (instead of bags) for the mixtures. Testing could also be done in an area with very low, or very high pressure.