

Comparative Politics

consider the differences between and similarities among political systems.

Courses in comparative politics study the political culture, processes and institutions of nations, political economies, and geographical areas, as well considering more thematic topics such as political (under) development, social movements, regimes in transition, and the role of women in politics.

