

Administrative Groups for Community Influence Mass Programs

Decisional Balance Worksheet

When we think about making changes, most of us don't usually consider all "options" in a complete way. Instead, we often do what we think we "should" do, avoid doing things we don't feel like doing, or just feel confident in our judgment and give up thinking about it at all. Thinking through the pros and cons of both changing and not making a change is one way we help ourselves make more fully considered a possible change. This worksheet is for "Thinking out" possible plans for changes and reasons for implementation, allowing writing in the reasons that you can think of in each of the boxes. Please note: people, "making a change" will probably mean something different and unique, but it is important that you consider what specific change you might want to make, which may be something else.

| Reasons For Change | Costs/Concerns |
|----------------------|----------------|
| What type of change? | |
| Costs/Concerns: | |
| Reasons for Change: | |