

They're, Their and There

It was Saturday night and I had invited a few friends over for pizza. "Where could they be?" I asked my mom, looking at my watch. "_____ already half an hour late!" Here they are now," she answered, seeing the headlights of _____ cars as they pulled into the drive. "_____ just parking _____ cars now."

Sure enough a few minutes later I heard the sound of _____ excited chatter as they made _____ way up the front path. After letting them into the house my friend Lucy asked where she and the others could hang _____ coats. "In _____," I told her, pointing to the cupboard by the door. "You'll find some space hangers in _____ but I warn you, _____ a little dusty!"

After my friends had hung up _____ coats we decided to order pizza. We started to look at the menus but my friends were taking _____ time offering something to order. "_____ is just so much to choose from," grumbled my friend Penny. "_____ is Hawaiian, Farmhouse, Meat Feast." "Ah, but don't forget," I interrupted, "_____ vegetarian," and pointed to those of the girls sat on the sofa, poring over _____ menus.

As we were finishing eating our way through a mountain of pizzas _____ with a quiet, contented sigh from Penny. "I love Pizza Palace," she said. "_____ pizzas are just so good. It's such a shame that _____ is so many calories in them!" "And it's an even bigger shame that _____ all gone," I laughed, picking up the very last slice.