

Gay Marriage

Everyone dreams of one day becoming married and having a family, and most of the time this dream is fulfilled, that is, if they are straight. As each year passes by, there seems to be an increasing number of gay couples that appear to become married. Even though gay marriage is becoming an extremely popular topic, people begin to realize that it does not fit into a few things (unless they are specific on the issue); gay marriage just exists on the outside of society as it opens up many opportunities for the gay couples themselves.

Bishops and other religious figures of the church believe that gay marriage is appalling, and should be abolished from society. The article mentioned in the National Catholic Reporter, "Bishops Warn of Damage to Marriage," it is revealed that bishops believe same sex marriage is "one of the most troubling developments in contemporary culture." (Roberts 1). According to him, the first command given to Adam and Eve was "be fruitful and multiply" (National Catholic Reporter). The culture of America is perceived to be a family consisting of one mother, one father, and however many kids are desired; however, if same-sex marriage were to be allowed, it would diminish all responsibilities of our culture. Bishops of the Church believe that it is "in the offspring" where "married love finds its increasing glory" (Roberts 1). To enhance into other words, the greatest achievement of marriage is found in the child created by that man and woman. Though one may not believe in Christ or anything to do with religion, the Church is against gay marriage because they believe that men and women were created to produce fertile offspring, a task impossible for gay couples.

Most people against gay marriage agree that it can sit and stay if not be permitted because the Bible makes it a dominant rule figure to protect her. In the Weekly Standard, "The Worst Thing About Gay Marriage," teaches us that "marriage is a part of a lifestyle system"
