

Relative Clauses*A. Content of the relative clauses

1. Is it possible to use the relative pronouns in three defining relative clauses?

1. I like someone who can be very, very generous (using the relative pronoun)
2. He writes poems which are so good.
3. How can you get behind someone who really has talent?
4. How often do you get behind when you really are not behind for anything important?
5. They believe someone who should have died.
6. Several great artists for the things people say they are.

2. Join the sentences by making a relative clause. (Add the proper relative pronoun.)

1. Could you please come to play? I would like to see you play.
2. The girl is the teacher. She is teaching the class.
3. I will give you my assignment if the teacher is interested in it.
4. I gave him the book. I thought he would like it.
5. She will be the best person to help you if you need it.
6. I will be the best person to help you if you need it.

3. What is the difference of meaning between these pair of sentences? Read them and choose the one which best completes these sentences.

4. (1) The driver who had the accident was a woman.
(2) The driver who had the accident was a man.
  5. (1) The girl who was in the car had the accident.
(2) The girl who was in the car had the accident.
  6. (1) The accident happened in the car.
(2) The accident happened in the car.
1. The accident happened in the car.
2. The accident happened in the car.