

Clauses

A clause is part of a sentence. A clause must contain a verb (a doing or being word). The main clause in a sentence makes sense on its own; it can usually be written as a sentence by itself. A subordinate clause gives further meaning to the main clause but does not make complete sense on its own.

Look at this sentence:

As time went by, the people grew weary of hearing the words of wisdom.

The main clause is "the people grew weary of hearing the words of wisdom" – it could be a sentence on its own. The subordinate clause is "as time went by" – it is not a complete sentence on its own.

Write down the main and subordinate clauses in the sentences below.

In a small town, there was a small house in which lived a young man, his wife, and the young man's sister.

main clause: _____

subordinate clause: _____

They returned to the great tree again and again, hoping to hear the words that would ease their misery.

main clause: _____

subordinate clause: _____

As the days passed, the weathered, gnarled mango tree started drying up and its leaves began to fall.

two main clauses: _____

subordinate clause: _____