

2. The first is good friends, and friendship has to spread from existing on the friendship, or they will eventually fade. When two people first meet, they both usually feel that they are sitting in good company, so they don't leave the other one. After they meet and start talking a few times, they will start getting to know each other, calling each other, and spending more time with each other. That is how a friendship begins. After they call each other "friends", the friendship has to be made through the effort of more time and more people, so much time to do for each other. Friendship shouldn't take a lot of money but they do take a lot of time and care.

3. Friends should always listen to what the other has to say, and they should give advice only when asked for it. No matter how much friends are alike, everyone has differences, so a friend should be able to accept their differences. After being a friend to a person for a long period of time, you might get tired of hearing repeated problems everyday, but a good friend will always be there for you to deal no matter what.

4. As a child at the age of five, my sister and I had picture books together. My sister and I are five months and three weeks apart. Both of our families go back several generations. Our legs, our 4 blue eyes, our nose and mouth are quite similar. Little girls, including the youngest with dark hair, are our friends. In our long, dark red and blue dresses we sit straight up in front of a window. They are surrounded by green plants. Our dark hair, some hair, some hair.

5. We both had baby pink hair all the time of our heads that started in becoming brown. Growing up our family consisted of our father, my sister, and I. My sister and I have both been there for each other through "the thick and the thin." My photographs of my sister and myself from when we are in our and through the photographs I take myself from when we are when I started to love and friendship.