

The archaeologist Howard Carter wrote a letter to London when he discovered the tomb of Tutankhamun. Read the description and tick all the objects below to which which ones are missing.

Food wine tables seats bags

I entered the tomb. The air was cold. Suddenly, just as I long and there in front of me was a big room. It was an incredible sight.

What I discovered were seats in the tomb. There were four seats in the tomb and six were in the biggest. The room was full of gold objects. There were two pictures of men. The statues were black and gold. Next to the statues there were two beautiful tables, and there were some chairs. The most surprising thing was that there weren't only big objects in the tomb, there were small things, too. There were boxes of shoes and boxes of clothes. There were rings too. There was even food and wine.

Exercise: Write three more questions about the information in Carter's letter, ask them to your partner:

- How many tables were there?
- Was there any water?
