

JERKS: Them, Us, and the Kingdom of Jerkdom

There are some honest talk about other jerks out there and how we may become one ourselves.

Which are often difficult to evaluate schools tend highly educated, the middle school kids seem to be the SOCIETY difficult. Each class of person for a different person in the eyes of others.

In fact, makes people difficult others are some times:

- Being mean:
People get more attention by saying or doing things to us that are upsetting.
- Ignoring us:
People ignore us when they pay attention to others. People dismiss what we say and act like we don't exist.
- Making us feel stupid:
People make comments about what we say that make us feel like they think we're stupid.
- Hating us:
People act really nice to others, or comment negatively and then, do things we perceive of as mean only when others aren't looking.
- Lying:
Lies to us. They say and make people think things that aren't true to make us feel bad or afraid to make themselves look better.
- 'What else?'

The reality is that some of us are "jerks" and each of us has been a difficult person to someone else, whether it's our friend, acquaintance, colleague we don't know, our sibling, and others to our families.

There are some things we need to do to handle the difficult person or difficult moment in our life:

1. Deal with anxiety

1. All of us treat anxiety some part of each day, if not all day, like a constant.
 - a. We need to be able to appreciate that all people feel some level of social anxiety. What are strategies with your teacher, counselor or parent to help you accept that you can become anxious without letting it stop you from thinking clearly about how to react and respond to others in a way that keeps people feeling good about you.
 - b. We've built in control over what social anxiety. Having a healthy process in something that most of us get used to. Once through we're "overcoming it," we don't let it take you over.
2. Consider the person who you are talking to, the one who is treating you like a jerk, has his own jerkiness inside of him. He may even have started all this by having lied you just now! Perhaps the person is just having a really moment himself or he may be a real jerk. Think of ways to combat the jerk inside your own head when you have trouble with others.
