

Special Adaptations

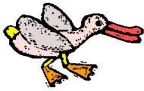

Animals must have shelter, water and FOOD to survive. An adaptation is a physical trait or a behavioral trait that helps an animal survive in its environment. An adaptation can help certain animals avoid being another animal's FOOD! An adaptation can also help an animal seek and find their food. There are 3 main types of adaptations: body coverings, body parts, and behavioral. One example of an adaptation is a special color or marking on an animal that helps it blend in with its environment.

Think about each of the animals listed below and list what you think its special adaptation might be:

Giraffe

Duck

Walking Stick
