

Discussion Question 1

The way an organization implements high ethical standards is more important than the actual standards on a paper basis. The ethics statement we discussed is admirable, and many employees clearly do not fully understand all aspects of what it encompasses, unless that is not the intent. The way the standards are implemented is clearly understood by all employees, and how to abide by all company code of ethics practices. Management has to clearly define high ethical standards to eliminate any gray area in the company ethical standards.

In my opinion all employees have the responsibility to uphold and adhere to ethics standards, but at the same time it is management's responsibility to implement ethical standards by implementing and abiding by all company codes.

dgoode.com