

Connectives in writing a balanced argument.

however, however, in addition, which were subsequently, therefore, consequently, despite that, although, as a result, in contrast, for instance, for example, eventually, furthermore, in order to, in other words, thus, instead, finally, on the other hand, since

copy the connectives above from the word bank another word (what name do you use)

is possible _____
because _____
for example _____
in contrast _____ therefore _____ consequently _____ however _____

(Now write these sentences with a suitable connective.)

1. Many children do not take enough exercise. (Many children are overweight.)

2. Some people believe that mobile phones should be banned in schools. Others say that a mobile phone is useful for contacting parents.

3. Many children suffer from tooth decay. They do not brush their teeth enough.

4. There are many ways of making a decision. You can read it, try it or feel it.

5. There is no teacher here that can teach it well. We cannot hold French lessons.

6. The short way is shorter. It requires more time.
