

A Fable

Once upon a time, a little, hungry mouse was wandering about a garden looking for something to eat. Presently, a delicious smell made her nostrils quiver with excitement, and so, as her mother had taught her when she was young, she followed her nose. Her nose led her to a great, round castle, tall and strong, and made of metal.

The mouse looked up at the castle, with its big, round roof, and wondered if it were possible to find a way in. So she went round and round the castle, tapping upon its hard wall with her tiny, sharp teeth. But alas! She could find no entrance. So she sat down and looked at it hungrily. The delicious scent was now so strong that her mouth began to water. "At last", she cried out in a hungry, little voice. "Oh, if only I could get in!" and then a great, hollow voice, which nearly frightened her to death, roared, "Are you talking to me?". It was the castle speaking.

Fear made the mouse dumb for a while but presently she said, "Please castle, do let me in!". "Castle!" boomed the voice, "how dare you call me Castle! I'm a Dustbin!"
