

Division Fact Family

(students record division in roof)

A house-shaped template for a division fact family. The roof is a triangle containing two empty rectangular boxes for recording division facts. The main body of the house is a rectangle containing four horizontal lines, each with a small square in the middle, representing a blank space for a division equation.

A house-shaped template for a division fact family. The roof is a triangle containing two empty rectangular boxes for recording division facts. The main body of the house is a rectangle containing four horizontal lines, each with a small square in the middle, representing a blank space for a division equation.

A house-shaped template for a division fact family. The roof is a triangle containing two empty rectangular boxes for recording division facts. The main body of the house is a rectangle containing four horizontal lines, each with a small square in the middle, representing a blank space for a division equation.

A house-shaped template for a division fact family. The roof is a triangle containing two empty rectangular boxes for recording division facts. The main body of the house is a rectangle containing four horizontal lines, each with a small square in the middle, representing a blank space for a division equation.