Eleanor Roosevelt:

A Leader for Human Rights

Eleanor Roosevelt was one of the most important women leaders in American history. She was born on October 11, 1884, in New York City. Later, she married Franklin D. Roosevelt, who became the President of the United States.

When her husband became president in 1933, Eleanor Roosevelt became the First Lady. However, she was not a traditional First Lady. Instead of only hosting events at the White House, she worked hard to help people in need. She traveled around the country to see how people were living during the Great Depression. She listened to their problems and shared their stories with the president.

Eleanor Roosevelt believed in fairness and equal rights for everyone. She supported women's rights and civil rights for African Americans. After President Roosevelt died, she continued her work. She became a delegate to the United Nations. She helped write an important document called the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which says that all people deserve freedom and respect.

Eleanor Roosevelt is remembered as a brave leader who worked to make the world a better place.
