ANCIENT NATIVE AMERICAN SOCIETIES

Long ago, Native American societies lived across North America.
Different groups created their own ways of life based on the land around them.

The Ancestral Puebloans lived in the Southwest.
They built homes from stone and adobe and grew crops such as corn, beans, and squash.

The Mississippian people lived near rivers in the eastern part of North America.
They built large earthen mounds and developed busy trading centers.

The Inuit lived in the Arctic region.
They adapted to the cold climate by hunting animals such as seals and fish for food.

These ancient societies were skilled builders, farmers, hunters, and traders.
They used natural resources wisely and passed their knowledge from one generation to the next.
