Memorial Day is celebrated every year on the last Monday in May, and some people call this the beginning of the summer season. But this holiday is more than a weekend to celebrate the beginning of summer. It is a day to honor American men and women who died while serving in the military. It is a day to remember those who lost their lives in service to the United States. The first Memorial Day was called Decoration Day, and it was first celebrated after the Civil War to honor soldiers who died during that conflict. This special day was later renamed Memorial Day in 1950. A good way to remember the meaning of Memorial Day is to think of the word "memory." This holiday is a day to remember. On Memorial Day, people honor the memory of those who died in service to their country.

Labor Day is a day to celebrate American workers. This holiday's purpose is to recognize the hard work of the labor force that keeps America working. The holiday is celebrated on the first Monday in September. Many people think of Labor Day as the end of summer, similar to how Memorial Day is the beginning of summer. Labor Day is also a day to honor the working men and women of America. People celebrate this day with picnics, parades, and other fun activities with friends and family. People take the day off from work to relax. Labor Day is the day to honor workers.

Veterans Day is a day to honor veterans who have served in the United States Armed Forces. A veteran is any person who has served in the military. Veterans Day is celebrated every November 11th. This day is a day to honor all veterans, both living and dead. Veterans Day was originally known as Armistice Day, which marked the end of World War I. People celebrate Veterans Day by attending parades and paying respect to veterans who have served their country.

Why is it important to know the difference between Memorial Day, Labor Day, and Veterans Day?
