Native American Homes

Long ago, Native American tribes lived in many different places across North America. The type of home they built depended on where they lived and the materials they could find.

Some tribes on the Great Plains lived in teepees. Teepees were made from wooden poles and animal hides. They were easy to move when tribes traveled to follow buffalo herds.

Other tribes lived in longhouses made from wood and bark. Longhouses were large homes where several families could live together. Today, Native Americans continue to share and celebrate their traditions and history.
