

Name:

Date:

NATIVE AMERICAN CULTURE

Write the correct answer.

Native Americans of the Northwest, such as the Haida, built totem poles up to 40 feet tall outside their homes to advertise their families' status. These poles showed animals or birds that were special to the family.

Native Americans did not record their history in writing. Archeologists learn about their cultures through artifacts such as tools and weapons.

How tall were some totem poles?

How are we able to learn about Native American history?

Totem poles usually show pictures of what?

Did Native Americans record their history?

What was the purpose of the totem pole?